

Windsor Voices

A 2026 National Poetry Month Collection Celebrating Windsor and Land & Sea

Curated by the City of Windsor's Poet Laureate and Storytellers team

TEXT ONLY EDITION

Here we are again...

Our "Windsor's Voices" initiative returns to bring poetry to the community in an innovative way as part of National Poetry Month 2026.

Windsor poets and photographers of all ages were invited to submit original poems or photos on one of two themes: what Windsor means to you, and Land & Sea - the League of Canadian Poets' 2026 theme for National Poetry Month.

This collection of creative works celebrates the neighbourhoods, landmarks, places, spaces, experiences, thoughts and inspirations that all reflect on what makes Windsor special. Through this initiative, we continue to promote poetry to an appreciative audience while strengthening the public's relationship to poetry and the creative arts.

We hope that you enjoy these works.

Contents

Language of a City, Poem, Rachael Casagrande Untitled, Poem, Tina Baraya Memories, Poem, Rebekah McLaren Along the Riverside, Poem, Sumaira Ahmed Water Flows Time, Poem, Kelly Lou Automotive Pizza, Poem, Summer Lu
Jackson Park, Poem, Benjamin Ru Body of Water, Poem, Crissi Cochrane
The Miracle of Being Earthbound, Poem, Barbara Pierce Marshall Sunspot, Poem, Bonnie Lan
Returning to Windsor, Poem, Dorothy Mahoney
This Land, Poem, Peter Hrastovec
My Border City, Poem, Celeste Kurcz
Inbox(2), Poem, Mia Isidore Sweetness & Laughter, Poem, Zaynab Adlan
Nosebleed, Poem, Alexander Pan
In this City, Poem, Vanessa Shields Windsor, Poem, Kathi Truscott-Cousineau Driving to Caldwell, Poem, Yongping Yuan Land & Sea, Poem, ishKODE Windsor in the Mirror, Poem, Alexei Ungurenasu Land & Sea, A Life For Me, Poem, Christopher Durocher Merging, Poem, Pedro D'avila
With a hollow rumble of wings, Poem, Christine Pennylegion
No Words, Poem, Larry Hobson
A Special Place I Call Home, Poem, Marianna DaSacco Journeys, Poem, Peter Hrastovec
Dancing Trees in Ojibway, Poem, Marty Gervais
A Deer in the Woods, Poem, Mary Ann Mulhern Project Credits and Thanks

Language of a City
Rachael Casagrande

Unknown words reach ears, whispers of syllables push thoughts to beat rhythms on my eardrums, trying to convey meaning that I can't understand.

On the tip of the tongue, dreams of words ushered to mind. My teacher smiling softly with paper in hand. Explain this word, please.

Down humid city streets more words raindrop, streaking down skin, melting paper-thin yesterdays. I know this one. It runs in my veins, thickened blood waterlogged with new.

I can remember, but all that's left are the burn marks under dried wax. Scrape it off, please.

Their skin like endless summers, eyes like far seas, seasons hinted in white hair.

The past clinging faintly, bolstering love letters of crossed seas passed down life in a language.

I remember the car window finger-streaked afternoon sunlight on sleeping faces.

Untitled
Tina Baraya

Dolma,

The kitchen counter exudes a proliferating scent, boiled water

Seeps into honey onion rice grenades, blessing the tips of our tongues in sour hot sweetness.

The same water

That evaporates, paints a maroon sky, rain pour

Kisses Lake Erie like a pulsating heart, water

Melts into barren salt mines,

Marinates the webs of calloused fingertips, water,

Home.

Memories

Rebekah McLaren

walking through central park dogs prancing around chasing singing birds and flighty squirrels the breeze whispers through the grass and blinding sun rays creep through the trees in streaks of con(gold)versations with strangers captured in memories that repeat with amusement forever

Along the Riverside

Sumaira Ahmed

The edge is struck by glistening waves as the sun submerges, the water is cast with warm hues.
Wings flutter. Seagulls Squack! elephants captured – time still – with stone Land painted with jade and growth up high, borders connect through an aged bridge Shoes striding on endless pavement with buildings in view across the blue.

Water Flows Time

Kelly Lou

The life we savour, slick and slipping off pebbles that line freshwater shores, sticks to waxy roof tiles while below, seeds crack from their shelled embrace and mature the soils of time.

The water wheel turns life over in its hands.

Automotive Pizza

Summer Lu

Metal hammers the Chrysler assembly line, Engines thunder beside the Detroit River.
But when the shifts end,
Stone ovens glow in the back of pizza shops, Shredded pepperoni crisps at the edges, Galati mozzarella turns golden brown.
Hands spin dough like another kind of wheel, Another kind of assembly line—only warmer.
Sweet oregano perfume drifts around the corner, Reminding you that you're home.

Jackson Park
Benjamin Ru

The sun illuminates the park colouring the flowers.
Your perspective shifts with every step.
Roses replenish your nostrils, fresh air tiptoes your tongue.
The core of the garden a tall evergreen pine is surrounded by tulips reminds weareone.

Body of Water
Crissi Cochrane

The water of my body has been prehistoric oceans, has kissed mountaintops and caressed lush valleys.
It has been lavender, lily, and hyacinth, has doused fire and housed babies.

Is it any wonder why I rush to the garden after it rains like a lover enchanted.

The Miracle of Being Earthbound
Barbara Peirce Marshall

They call it earthbound: the inability to fly.
But what could be better than to be bound to this miracle of earth?

On this south-west shore where land and river intersect, where, earth is water, sky is sea, with both feet on the ground we soar —

There is no such thing as earthbound

Sunspot
Bonnie Lan

A sea of dandelions bright as the sun that peeks through the leaves that lets their shadows dance on the pavement

The faint whine of a swing set flying in solitude

Kominar Playground,
I remember when you were small
You remember when I was small too.

Returning to Windsor

Dorothy Mahoney

again, eagles nest on Peche Island, Jack Miner's geese are plentiful, and wild turkeys roam our front lawns then seasonal visitors choose to stay:

robins, red-winged blackbirds, swans what is it that birds know

This Land

Peter Hrastovec

in honour of the Grand Opening of City Hall Square

Cities have the capability of providing something for everybody, only because, and only when, they are created by everybody.

----Jane Jacobs

Breaking bark, bramble and bush, tearing past trees that climb so high they tickle the underbelly of clouds, the first keepers of this earth emerged to smell the river, to hear its roar.
They stopped to breathe, take in with eyes astonished, this space and acknowledged that this land was good.

They were followed by the fitful pioneers seeking prosperity, peace, driving their horse-drawn ambition, the burdens of history shouldered like hard oak barrels laden with promise, grief.

They persisted, determined and resolute, to build their own community, a town, and here, a school, in this space since this land was good.

And the unshackled freedom seekers, scarred, brutalized, bearing the remains of their flagging spirit, trekked onward, starward, rising above ground to this place, mingling and mixing with refugees, visionaries, idealists—all discarding the remnants of bitterness, darkness, built footings, foundations, recognizing this land was good.

In time, architects, planners, labourers, measured the distance between two places, and envisioned developing this same space, to give rise to a new purpose, raise expectations, engineer optimism, create memories, lure the curious, beckon innovation, foster friendships, heal sorrow, and generate joy in this place where this land was good.

This foresight—this prudent thinking about neighborhood, community—is rooted in generations, wending its way here over mountains, oceans, and many miles, to find a home, here where we are now, here where we were then and here forever, because this land is good.

My Border City
Celeste Kurcz

The border city where I was born and raised, Using Celsius on cold winter days, Switching to Fahrenheit when summer rays blaze.
Two bridges and a tunnel connect our waterways.
Auto industry—known,
It's my home.
Our beloved Rose City.

Inbox (2)
Mia Isidore

admissions | University of Windsor Application Decision - Dear Mia, We are happy to...

University of Waterloo | Update to your application - Hello Mia, There is a new decision...

"What are you waiting for? Accept your offer already."

"Which one?"

"What do you mean which one." "..."

"All these years... You have some audacity to be ungrateful for all the tutoring and even your own hard work. Your past self broke her back for this."

"Okay." "Anyone would kill to be in your position. What possible reason do you have that you're even considering Windsor?"

Nice weather. Pizza. The people. My friends.

"Windsor was just the safety net option." "Okay, I accepted the offer."

"Which one?"

Sweetness & Laughter
Zaynab Adlan

Bubbles & Cream

A boba shop at the York Plaza.

Rain, shine, sadness, laughter, and life.

It's seen it all.

The endless stream of boba cups. The bitter-sweet after taste of too-sweet tapioca pearls.

Too familiar to let go.

Just enough to call,

Home.

Nosebleed
Alexander Pan

a warm, copper taste in the depths of your throat a tissue blooms

red like a poppy with delicate roots caressing the rich, moist earth.

drip, drip, drip, down the drain you watch the frothing river of crimson swirl it stops.

it was never going to go on forever though, for a moment, you wondered.

In this city...

Vanessa Shields

the old country hangs on gold chains, sainted: anthony for lost language francis for poverty humbled, mary for mothers weeping in pews grandfather's collar is green, grandmother's is white a janitor and a seamstress: united and uniformed, unioned they hold hands in Jackson Park as rose bushes blush redder than cheeks flushed in young love – this city an immigrant canvas her needle, his broom build a family – Sunday meals, CBC on the radio in this city, this landing place, the flowing river proves permanence profound

Windsor

Kathi Truscott-Cousineau

Windsor is my home, of United Nations.

It' a hockey town plus Carrousel of the Nations.

Windsor is a border town with Detroit, were a river runs between.

Driving to Caldwell
Yongping Yuan

I

Driving through the night, we pass Amherstburg.
Our destination: the indigenous settlement.
A remnant of the moon blurs against the snow, Fringing thin fields of yellow grass.
I watch in solitude, Yet feeling a surge of joy—
Like a squirrel sensing for the first time
The intricate bird-homes tucked in the soft grass.

II

The car hurtles down the highway.
Along the way, glowing billboards flash the word "ONTARIO."
Deep in the secret reaches of the fields, Creatures unknown to us are on the move.
Their stillness feels like a prelude
To a sudden ambush... while we are utterly naked.
No weapons in hand, we have nothing to offer
But a few stray bones and two beating hearts.

III

Nearing Caldwell,
Moonlight congeals in the mist Upon the windowpane. No one notices
The damp message of stones On the roadside branches. The gas station—where tobacco is traded—glows a vivid red;
The rain-slicked streets are deserted.
As we arrive, the moon peers through the clouds.
The rain stops. Stepping out with the tobacco, I open the car door,
And a few gathered droplets scatter from the crown of a shimmering aspen—A tremor so real, so sudden,
Like a soul startled by a vast, overwhelming grief.

Land & Sea
ishKode

Luminous Windsor nights with the river shimmering, breathing, reflecting & sharing like an open mic on the shores.

Ambassador waves hello in my peripheral, an iron prayer lifting footsteps from one homeland to another once more.

Nibi* flowing, patient and powerful, carving, cleansing, carrying memory older than industry, older than border, older than war.

Down where the river bends, grasses bowing, whispering, remembering the earth steady beneath us, generous and sacred at its core.

& a bridge of breath between both worlds of liquid and solid.

Strait talk, Windsor-Detroit scripture, freighters dragging constellations heavy and solemn, ancient and acknowledged through lodges.

East side heart beats where Caesars' lights blink code to Motown and the tunnel hums bass as my steps hand out hugs to the land gladly.

Anishinaabe Aki* enduring, guiding, breathing, people protecting, honoring, rising, still here, still kin, still family.

Windsor in the Mirror
Alexei Ungurenasu

I measure the distance from home in years not kilometers, not where are you from but when, and the ghost I left hovers above a bridge I've never seen complete, the formative years behind us.

More than thirty bridges cross the Han River and ghosts of their own invite reflection reminding me to look back, remember— I wonder if objects in the mirror are closer than they appear.

Land & Sea, A Life For Me
Christopher Durocher

Never hath the river waned, Nor hath my blood been stained.
Only now I see the day,
To which my dreams have come to pray.
Sun and stream have yet to beam, Suttle lines coloured in between.
The new, the old, the warm, the cold,
All in file, ne'er to be sold.

Merging
Pedro D'avila

In sweet blue I seek Tidal waves and ocean roars unite Through night and shine as one Shallow and profound
You are all to be found Sweet blue Lord,
Sweet blue sea
Sweet blue - carry me

With a hollow rumble of wings
Christine Pennylegion

Last spring I buried a blue jay, nestled deep between the fig tree's roots.

All summer we watched the fruitlets grow, waiting for September's ripening swell.

A bumper crop. Each fig was sweet and tender as a bruise, with a wild aftertaste of sky.

No Words
Larry Hobson

words can't describe her my friends couldn't do her justice, no matter how hard I might try words are futile, it's a feeling..... an emotion an endless love, my city and home my life

A Special Place I Call Home
Marianna DaSacco

April 1970

Called Windsor our home Small city, beautiful scenery, All around.

I especially thought the riverfront was totally amazing
And so many boats!

The Peace Fountain,
Walks along the riverfront,
So much to see So very enjoyable.
Lots of special memories
To cherish.

A creative community Meet new people and share Similar interests
Cooking, arts, the beach.
Have a meal with family,
Watch a movie with friends and have a good laugh!

Weddings in a waterfront park, Couples in love Exchange vows and begin Life together.
The young bring happiness,
Share with generations.

Windsor will surprise us all!
Smile on your face,
Look up,
Parades
The music is playing in your heart.
Windsor, you got it!

Journeys

Peter Hrastovec

We walk at a deliberate pace, a calculated hike along the edge of history to “get our steps in” on the same sun-fed south shore where ancients thrived, survived without smart watches or foam-filled shoes designed for comfort.

We move with the wind, outpace the long drawn shadows signalling late afternoon and the return of migrant spirits who, like us, can never get enough of this emerald fantasy, their labour a centuries-long contribution to the evolving cityscape.

They catch up to us, sweet souls all, for we have paused to breathe.

Dancing Trees in Ojibway

Marty Gervais, From Walk in the Woods for my grandchildren

It is not quite summer but the trees are already dancing under a stormy sky and this is good I would tell my grandchildren if they were nearby but I walk alone it would sound wise probably or if they start reading Hemingway they would see the influence or see that it's true, the trees are dancing and that is good, and they stretch and move with poise and grace in a time that calls for this little bit of joy in a time that tells me there is something better, in a time when being alone really means this is good this is a time to pause, to stop me in my tracks and let me see their young limbs dancing beneath all that is stormy, all that is alone

A Deer in the Woods

Mary Ann Mulhern, From Walk in the Woods

In the hunger of winter a deer stands alone

as if she welcomes me pleads for food

I offer food from my hand her mouth moves across my palm gentle and soft

so many blessings shining in her eyes

all for an apple cut in half

Thank You

To all those who submitted poems and photos, and to...

Our Submission Reviewers

Marty Gervais, Poet Laureate Emeritus

Peter Hrastovec, Poet Laureate

Project Support and Documentation

Salina Larocque, Cultural Development Coordinator

Collection Design and Layout

Christopher Lawrence Menard, Supervisor, Cultural Affairs